About Foundry: Since 1971 Foundry Gallery has encouraged and promoted Washington, DC area artists. Begun by four students of Gene Davis, who shared studio space in the Duval Foundry in Georgetown, Foundry offers an alternative gallery experience to artists. As an artist-run organization Foundry is free to exhibit a wider range of work than commercial galleries and to allow artists greater control over the exhibition and sale of their work. Members are primarily local artists who pool their resources to support the gallery. Foundry is a diverse group with different ages and backgrounds, and who work in diverse media. As a non-profit organization Foundry members contribute to the educational mission of the gallery by planning and implementing events during their contract periods. These events have ranged from lectures by artists and performances by invited guests to workshops for children, adults and other artists. Artists also contribute to the functioning of the gallery.
